Founded nearly eight centuries ago, Indonesia's second-largest city has seen empires come and go. The founders of the Hindu Majapahit Empire arrived in the late 13th century and remained until the 17th, to be followed by Muslim rulers of Mataram, then the colonialists of the Dutch East India Company. In recent decades, Surabaya has grown into a cosmopolitan seaport and conurbation where 21st-century hotels, apartment towers, and shopping malls stand next to historic mosques and palaces.

THE CITY

Andreas Hie/Shutterstock.com

For centuries, Surabaya has attracted immigrants from the Javanese hinterland, the neighbouring island of Madura, and from all the islands of Indonesia. As a result, the city is an ethnic melting pot, including an Arab quarter founded by traders from the Middle East, and a Chinese quarter inhabited by the descendants of traders who settled here more than five centuries ago.

On the south bank of the Kalimas River estuary, Surabaya is a fast-growing modern city: the second largest in Indonesia and one of the country's major centres for shipbuilding, heavy manufacturing and light industry. It is also a major financial centre, and ambitious new developments for the future include the construction of Southeast Asia's longest bridge, linking the city to the island of Madura.

The pace of life in the bustling city centre can be overwhelming for the first-time visitor. Limousines, taxicabs, buses, bemo minibuses and becak scooter-taxis jostle for space on the busy avenues, where gleaming hotel, apartment and office towers dominate. A few blocks inland from the waterfront, Kampung Arab (Arab Quarter), is a labyrinth of old-fashioned chophouses and narrow, colourful streets reminiscent of the city's mercantile past. Chinatown straddles Jalan

Kembang Jepun.

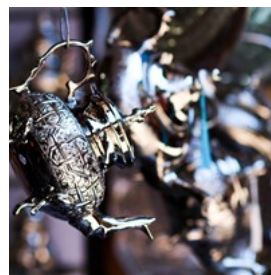

DO & SEE

Krist Setyawan/Shutterstock.com

Much of Surabaya's heritage has been swept away by fast-paced modernisation, and the city was also heavily damaged in the aftermath of World War II during the struggle for independence, earning its title the "Hero City" of Indonesia. As a result, it has rather few major visitor attractions, but boasts a couple of distinct neighbourhoods, each with its own distinct flair, including the Arab Quarter and Chinatown. Surabaya is also home to Masjid Nasional Al Akbar, one of Southeast Asia's most imposing modern mosques.

Arab Quarter

One of the centerpieces in Surabaya's eclectic mosaic of a cityscape, the Arab Quarter (also called Ampel) is a must-visit area of the city that much resembles the mazy old Arabic town centers. While here, take time to see the expansive, marble-floored Ampel Mosque.

G-Walk

With mid- and upper range establishments mixed in with busy street food stalls, Surabaya's G-Walk is a favorite dining spot for many locals. Stretching between Pakuwon Super Mall and Ciputra Golf, it is a lively area packed with bars, eateries and outdoor markets.

Kalimas Traditional Harbour

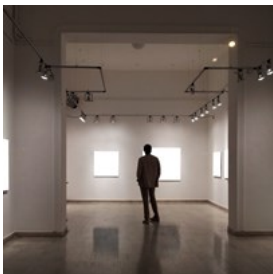

For a strong whiff of the sea and a taste of what remains of old Surabaya visit the Kalimas Harbour, the city's original port. This is where broad-beamed pinisi schooners unload produce along a 2 km stretch of quayside. The best time to visit is early in the morning when the boats are setting sail.

Mpu Tantular Museum

Surabaya's most important museum offers fascinating insight into the ancient history of the city. See exhibits dating back to the era of the Majapahit Empire, Chinese and Annamese ceramics, wayang puppet figures, paintings and photos of colonial Surabaya and batik print-making equipment.

Tugu Pahlawan (Heroes' Monument)

This landmark monument can be seen in the city centre. The Tugu Pahlawan is a typical piece of grandiose post-independence

Indonesian public art and was erected in memory of the independence fighters who fell in the Battle of Surabaya in November 1945.

Monumen Kapal Selam (Submarine Monument)

On the bank of the Kalimas River, the Indonesian Navy's first submarine - the Soviet-built Whiskey class sub Pasopat - is now a national monument honouring heroes of the independence struggle and celebrating the country's seafaring tradition. Built in Vladivostok, it was bought by Indonesia in 1962.

DINING

Odua Images/Shutterstock.com

Indonesia's favourite dish, nasi goreng (mixed fried rice) is on the menu everywhere, from hotels' breakfast tables to simple open-air food stalls. Surabaya's cuisine is as varied as its people, with restaurants serving a host of Indonesian favourites.

Chicken and beef are the most common fowl and meat dishes. Indonesia is predominantly a Muslim country, and pork is a rarity. Hawker stalls and food markets purvey regional delicacies from all over the country. At these, you order what you want from any of dozens of vendors and find a table wherever you can.

Kayoon Park, on the west bank of the Kayoon River, is filled with food stalls selling East Javanese and Madurese favourites soon after sundown. As well as these typical treats, most major hotels have as many as half a dozen restaurants serving western-international, Chinese, Japanese, and Indian food. Many of the best restaurants can be found in larger hotels, but budget travellers will find plenty of modestly priced eateries all over.

Sarkies

This elegant premier restaurant at the luxury Majapahit Mandarin Oriental is probably the most exclusive eating place in Surabaya. The menu is varied and consists of both western and eastern dishes (emphasis on Chinese) and a superb choice of the freshest seafood.

Kya Kya Food Centre

The "food centre" is a collection of street food vendors who set up shop daily (at around 4 pm) right in the middle of Surabaya's Chinatown.

This is, perhaps, the best place to try various Indonesian and Chinese delights with minimal expenses - perfect for travellers on a budget.

Warung Bu Kris

As hard as it is to pick a stand-out amongst the dozens of "warungs" dotting the city, Bu Kris definitely makes the cut as one of the best. Try the

"iga penyet" - a traditional local dish consisting of ribs and a dip called "sambal", generously smothered over the meat. The interior is authentic and very casual.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Kzenon/Shutterstock.com

Much of Surabaya's nightlife revolves around upscale hotels - Shangri-La, for one, attracts an international crowd and is one of the expats' favourite haunts in the city. Although the variety of nightlife establishments isn't huge, there are quite a few bars to choose from if you're looking to spend a night out on the town.

Colors Pub & Restaurant

Colors Pub & Restaurant is a little bit rough and ready, but attracts a lively young local audience. This place has regular live bands and plays popular hits. Come in the evening for a solid pre-party (the drink list is extensive), or stay until late and dance the night away.

Address: 81 Jalan Sumatera, Surabaya

Phone: +62 31 503 0562

Desperados Bar

The Shangri-La Hotel's friendly Tex-Mex cantina is a great place for chili, fajitas and burritos earlier in the evening. Later in the evening it turns into one of Surabaya's liveliest nightspots, and gets increasingly loud as the night progresses. Live band plays often.

Jimmy's Club and Lounge

The Marriott Hotel's lively bar regularly re-invents itself and was recently re-opened as a high-tech, led-light lit premium lounge and club occupying the entire basement of Surabaya's JW Marriott hotel. Food served here is premium, too - delicacies like foie gras and caviar feature on the menu.

Our Bar

Currently one of the few places to be when it comes to nightlife in Surabaya, Our Bar is a relaxed evening venue with two seating areas - inside, where live music plays on a nightly basis (guitar/piano) and outdoors, in a quieter, green area. Serves an array of bar food.

Foreplay Club

If you're looking to explore Surabaya's clubbing scene, try Foreplay - a longstanding nightlife establishment smack in Surabaya Town Square. Music played varies depending on the night and the guest DJ (check the web site for more info), but gravitates towards house and rave.

SHOPPING

Edmund Lowe Photography/Shutterstock.com

Surabaya has several handicraft and antique shops that sell carvings and textiles from Java, Bali and other islands. The city's large shopping malls are also good places to shop in air-conditioned comfort for international-brand clothing, and other goods at very competitive prices (check out the monumental Tunjungan Plaza). The city's gold market is on Jalan Bauram, lined with jewellers and goldsmiths shops, most products are of 24 carat purity. For a colourfully authentic shopping experience, head to one of the city's many markets. Those in the Arab Quarter, for example, feature dozens of vendors that sell cotton and silk sari lengths, batik and ikat cloth, herbs, spices and perfumes.

Tunjungan Plaza

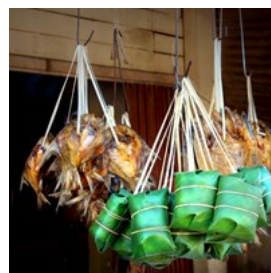

Surabaya's shopping central, this mega mall is a giant made up of five different zones, with zone 5 being home to the most upmarket brand boutiques. Bring time, as navigating the endless maze of stores might prove difficult to first-time visitors. The mall houses an IMAX cinema and a food court.

Pasar Genteng

One of Surabaya's many markets, Pasar Genteng is, perhaps, less hectic than its many cousins sprawling around the city. The main attraction here are the exotic local snacks - many come pre-packaged and make for perfect souvenirs and gifts to bring home.

Address: Jl. Genteng Besar, Surabaya

Pasar Pabean

An indoor market linking the Arab Quarter and Chinatown, Pasar Pabean is a bustling mix of vendor's stalls enveloped in the scent of fresh seafood. Fish, crabs, clams and other marine creatures are in abundance, along with various kinds of produce and knick-knacks.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Juanda International Airport

Juanda International Airport is located just outside Surabaya. Facilities include currency exchange, post office, business centre, tourist information desk, car rental desks and tax free shopping.

Fixed price taxis operate from a rank outside the Arrivals terminal, and all major hotels offer mini-bus shuttle transfers or chauffeur-driven meet-and-greet service.

Bus service operates between the airport and the Bungurasih bus station. Using the bus is only recommended if your route continues from here to other destinations, and you are planning to continue your journey by bus.

Public transport

For the visitor, the deluxe air conditioned buses which operate on the cross-town routes are the best public transport option. Key points in the city are also connected by city express buses, operating on two main routes. For all services you can buy tickets on board.

Bemos (small mini-buses) operate on set routes but without a timetable, and leave only when all seats are filled. One of the best ways to see the local environs is to charter a bemo for the day. You can also charter a bemo for a single journey on the same basis, and this can be the most cost effective way of getting around the city.

Taxi

Surabaya has plenty of taxis, but meters lag behind fare inflation and negotiating a fare can be tricky unless you speak Bahasa Indonesia, as few drivers speak any other language. Drivers should carry a rate sheet showing the current fare to most destinations - check the fare before getting in. More sensibly, ask your hotel or restaurant to call a cab for you.

Three-wheeled scooter-taxis (called becak in Indonesia) are ubiquitous, but have no fixed price. For foreigners, they can often be more expensive than a taxi, and a becak ride is rarely enjoyable.
