THE REGION

Pitiya Phinjongsakundit/Shutterstock.com

The Sami are and will continue to be an inalienable part of Swedish Lapland. Their customs for culture, cooking and keeping reindeer very much affect those living here today — one example being the traditional Sami dish Souvas, made from smoked reindeer meat (served in many of the local restaurants). Here in Lapland, visitors get the chance to learn about and understand the history, life, and culture of the native Sami people.

Winter is a wonderful time for all those who love snow and winter sports. There is a countless number of slopes and tracks for ski trips. It is not surprising that the Swedish skiing masters, with Ingemar Stenmark and Anja Pärson in the forefront, come from Lapland's Tärnaby. A snowmobile safari for a few days will get you out into the wild. If you want a more natural feeling, you might prefer a ride with a dog sled over vast expanses of snow, all under the colourful cascades of the northern lights. They are clearly visible in the polar night, the time of year when the sun does not reach over the horizon.

Here, snow and ice are the building materials for the irresistible Icehotel in Jukkasjärvi, which is built anew each year. The northern cold here is more comfortable than the chill in southern Sweden because humidity levels are incomparably lower here. However, remember to dress in layers before going out on snowy trips.

The summer is exquisitely beautiful and perfect for hikes along the mountain trails. Fishing on a lake or along the mighty rivers is a unique experience and joy when your catch writhes in your arms. If you, on the other hand, want to test your bravery, white-water rafting is a good option. At this time of the year, it never really gets dark since the midnight sun shines around the clock. Try a helicopter tour for a fantastic view of the area.

Lapland is an area full of culture, where the World Heritage site Gammelstaden (Old Town) in Luleå holds a unique position. The churches in Jukkasjärvi and Kiruna are impressively beautiful and you should not miss the Silver Museum in Arjeplog. Attending a sauna here is a tradition to be observed. You will also get several opportunities to buy mementoes and visit local craftsmen who, through their work, preserve old cultures, not least the Sami culture.

It's not all about the past here in Lapland - visit the Esrange Space Center, which sends research rockets to space and — eventually — might just become the starting point of human expeditions.

DO & SEE

Jens Ottoson/Shutterstock.com

Lapland is Sweden's northernmost region, which provides a steady stream of adventurous pursuits all year round. The main attraction is Lapland's unique and magnificent unspoiled wilderness, which brings in visitors not only from Sweden but from the whole world. If you ever look out over Rapa Valley in Sarek's National Park or visit the World Heritage site of Laponia, you'll instantly know why this corner of the world enjoys a reputation for being exceptionally stunning.

Northern Lights & Midnight Sun

Light plays a central role in this part of Sweden. The winter nights are lit up thanks to the dazzling Northern Lights that flow over the sky in different colours. If you are really quiet you can hear how they crackle. While during the summer months, the nights never get dark thanks to the midnight sun squandering its light.

Dog Sledding

Embark on a thrilling winter adventure by experiencing the exhilarating activity of riding on a sled pulled by a team of lively dogs. The combination of the brisk pace and the stunning winter landscape ensures that memories from this fun sled ride linger in your mind long after the adventure ends.

Tärendö Church

The first stone blocks to the church foundation walls were broken in 1875 in Kenttäröva. The same year F. R. Ekberg completed the drawings of the architect. The Royal Majesty, however, decided in 1877, that the church and schoolhouse would be built in the same area: Nivankorvanmaa. A significant restoration occurred in 1941, addressing structural and interior changes, and the church was reconsecrated in 1942. The restoration included new pews, removal of the heating stove, and electric lighting.

Fishing in Lapland

Lapland is Europe's last wilderness, a true paradise for fishermen. Lapland offers many opportunities for great fishing adventures, both with the fly and lure.

The fishing season is short and intense, summer nights are bright and during June and July, the sun never drops below the horizon. There are five free-flowing rivers, creeks, forest lakes, and mountain lakes and the fish never sleeps. Bring the coffee pot, matches, and something to eat so that you have enough energy to fish all through the night.

Hunting

Hunting is a big part of the culture and traditions here in the north, and it has been ever since the first inhabitants settled in the area. This close to nature, the locals have had a unique opportunity to follow deer populations, recognise individuals, and get a good understanding of game, thus securing sustainable hunting of a viable wildlife population.

Vasikkavuoma

Vasikkavuoma is the largest haymaking mire in the Nordic countries, if not in Europe, covering approximately 250 acres. In its heyday, this expansive area was dotted with about 350 barns, a testament to the historical practice of harvesting sedge and horsetail for fodder by local farmers. Though the number has diminished to 70 remaining barns, Vasikkavuoma preserves the echoes of a bygone era and the agricultural traditions that once thrived in this unique landscape.

The Struve Geodetic Arc (Pajala)

The Struve Geodetic Arc is a chain of survey triangulation points that stretch from Hammerfest in Norway all the way to the Black Sea. The imaginary lines go through ten countries and over 2,820 kilometres. Carried out between 1816 and 1855 by the astronomer Friedrich Georg Wilhelm Struve, this survey represented the first accurate measuring of a long segment of a meridian, helping establish the exact size and shape of the planet.

Sweden has seven measurement points and four of them are on the World Heritage List (on the mountains Tynnyrilaki, Jupukka, Pullinki, and Perävaara). The mountaintop unveils an expansive view.

DINING

Michael Krantz/Shutterstock.com

In Swedish Lapland, fish and game, especially reindeer, play a central role in the local cuisine. The common dish called souvas, smoked reindeer meat should preferably be enjoyed in the Sami flatbread 'gáhkko' together with lingonberries. Add to that dishes of bear, mountain trout, grouse, fine whitefish roe from Kalix with morels, and arctic raspberries to compliment the meal. End with locally-made chocolate or a piece of 'kaffeost', or coffee cheese. In this diverse culinary kingdom, you are guaranteed an unparalleled food experience.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

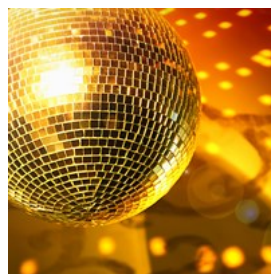

wavebreakmedia/Shutterstock.com

The minor cities in Swedish Lapland have relatively quiet nightlife. You can still find some bars and nightclubs at the hotels or in the biggest cities. During the last couple of years, some interesting microbreweries have started to appear in Lapland. So, why not give the local produce a taste?

The nightlife is also quite special during summer in the northern part of Sweden due to the midnight sun, when it remains light all through the night. Most daytime activities like playing golf, paddling, swimming, and horseback riding are commonly done at night during this period — so don't miss your chance to experience these in the small hours of the morning, even if only for bragging rights.

Hotel Smedjan (Pajala)

Hotel Smedjan in Pajala offers a vibrant social scene with a range of exciting events—from pub nights to disco parties to live music. Embrace the Swedish tradition of 'Fredagsmys', or cosy Fridays, with a weekly-changing theme. On-site, there's also a nightclub (only open a couple of times per month) where you can enjoy live music and disco vibes.
