Often called the 21st arrondissement of Paris, Deauville has been the go-to destination for the upper crust of French society for decades. Today, it is a spectacular seaside resort town sporting grand promenades, glamorous casinos, a pair of thoroughbred horse race tracks, golf courses, the American Film Festival, and plenty of chic visitors.

THE CITY

Pack-Shot/Shutterstock.com

Deauville is a paradise for trend-watchers and lovers of the finer things in life, beaches, casinos, horse racing, and couture shopping. Its glamorous old world villas, manors, and hotels host many cultural events and festivals throughout the year, most notably a star-studded film festival in September that gives Cannes a run for its money.

Deauville's fashionable avenues and plazas, Ruedes Villas and Place Morny among them, are veritable Meccas for boutique shopping. In the centre are the town's legendary racetracks, used for equestrian races throughout the year.

DO & SEE

Evgeny Trezubov/Shutterstock.com

Summer is peak season for Deauville, but during the winter, life slows down and much of the action moves to neighbouring Trouville, a few minutes' walk east. Here you will find a busy fishing port, lively Sunday market and quiet, winding streets full of sublime French charm.

Deauville Beach

At Deauville's 1400 metre-long beach many choose to rent one of the colourful parasols and keep to the sands, where celebrity spotting is the most popular activity. The beach has all the amenities and facilities you could want: seaside tennis, recreation clubs for children and teens, a swimming pool, thalasso spa and a water sports centre where you can rent boats and boards.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Jeff Thrower/Shutterstock.com

Deauville has no shortage of places to down a pint, linger over a glass of Chardonnay or sip on a smart cocktail. Be sure also to try out neighbouring Trouville, whose enjoyable drinking establishments may be less posh, but no less French.

Given the clientele that comes to sojourn in Deauville, it is a little surprise that the town has a superb, non-stop nightlife with dozens of chic and fashionable clubs and music venues. You will be able to find more relaxed places too. Many clubs open at 10 pm and do not close their doors until well past 5 am.

Le Seven

Le Seven is a nightclub with a psychedelic décor. In this smoky late-night disco you can listen and dance to popular DJ's. Occasionally there are music and dance events here.

SHOPPING

Syda Productions/Shutterstock.com

Deauville rivals Paris for ultra-chic designer shopping, featuring some of the fashion world's most well-known (and highly-priced) brands. The most well-known shops include luxury names like Louis Vuitton, Hermès, Cartier, Sonia Rykiel and Dior. There is a reason some people joke that the town's name should be "Doughville"!

In terms of other shopping, Deauville has two other main streets to explore: rue Desiré-le-Hoc and rue Eugène Colas, where a number of small boutiques sell clothing, jewellery and various local French products. The nearby avenue de la République has shops selling antiques, knick-knacks and French delicacies.

Place Morny

Place Morny holds a farmers' market every Tuesday and Friday, where rural French vendors sell homemade products like cheese, bread and wines.

Address: Place Morny, Deauville

Place de Casino

For haute couture and the latest clothing and accessories, make a beeline for the streets connecting Place de Casino with place Morny, where you will find several dozen small boutiques and shops. Prices will not be any cheaper than elsewhere, of course, but there are few more glamorous places to shop than Deauville and chances are you will be rubbing shoulders with some famous shopaholics.
