THE CITY

Hamperium Photography/Shutterstock.com

Östersund's central location, almost at the very centre of Sweden, gives the city proximity to both coastal landscape and mountains. The popular ski destination, Åre, is only an hour away by train, and to Stockholm, it takes about 50 minutes by air (or 5 hours by train).

During the summertime, the city streets are lined by outdoor cafés and people of all ages — from near and far — socialising and making Östersund into a lively city. Storsjöyrän, the annual festival, is one of the summer's highlights.

During the dark winter season, besides the possibility of outdoor activities and the white snow, there are theatre performances, concerts, the troubadours, and, of course, the chance to see the amazing northern lights dancing in the sky.

The city of Östersund was founded in 1786 and was at the beginning a typical settlers community where lawlessness is said to have been widespread. Illegal bars were common and the streets were pitch black after nightfall. As late as 1876, the first kerosene lamp appeared on the street. By the middle of the 19th century, trade and craft slowly increased and by the beginning of the 20th century, several stately buildings had been erected as a sign of the increasing prosperity. 50 years later, Östersund was a military city with thriving industries.

Today, Östersund is one of the most pleasant Northern, medium-sized Swedish cities. Lots of small shops line the main thoroughfares through the city centre and the "outdoor factor" is remarkably strong — given that the ski resort of Åre is not far away. In proportion to its population, the city is also one of the most cafés- and restaurant-dense cities in Sweden, so you will, definitely, get the opportunity to enjoy a good cup of coffee.

Blue, white, and green — the colours of Jämtland's flag testifies Östersund's surroundings — the distant blue, mountains, the snowy winter landscape, and the green forests. The wilderness is always close and the area around Östersund offers endless opportunities for exciting day outs not only for those who want to find peace but also for those looking for an adventure.

The island of Frösön has been a gathering place for humans for thousands of years and today, it offers little of everything found in the rest of Jämtland.

The county of Jämtland covers 12 per cent of Sweden's surface, but only 1.5 per cent of Sweden's population lives here. This creates large imaginary gaps in civilisation, guaranteeing some of Scandinavia's most magnificent nature.

The Sami culture has left its mark on the region and around 44,500 reindeer belonging to 11 Lapp villages, wander the land. And, with some luck, you might also spot moose, bear, wolverine, wolf, lynx, arctic fox, and musk ox.

Jamtli

If you only want to visit one museum when visiting Östersund and Jämtland, then choose the Jamtli. During the summer months, you can meet people from the past and experience the local culture up close. In winter, the museum transforms into a traditional Christmas market. Jamtli also hosts a unique underground exhibition that intricately narrates the history of Norrland. Among its treasures is the Överhogdal hangings, a 1000-year-old textile picture, Europe's oldest and best-preserved. Awarded with three stars by Guide Michelin, Jamtli promises a captivating journey through time and culture.

Frösön Island

Situated to the west of Östersund, the largest island in Lake Storsjön, Frösön holds a rich historical significance. Named after the Norse god Freyr, the island, which served as the regional centre of Jämtland throughout much of recorded history, boasts the northernmost raised runestone in the world, known as the "Frösö Runestone".

Easily accessible by foot, car, or bus, the island is a short walk across the pedestrian bridge from Östersund. The renowned Swedish composer Wilhelm Peterson-Berger's enchantment with the island led to the creation of "Sommarhagen", now a museum and one of Östersund's most visited attractions.

Frösö Church

Frösö Church, one of Jämtland's major tourist attractions, holds a rich history dating back to the 12th century.

Archaeological findings suggest the church was built on a former pagan sacrificial site. Despite a destructive fire in 1898, the church's interiors were salvaged, and it remains a testament to the region's heritage. Renowned for its association with composer Wilhelm Peterson-Berger's compositions, the church's picturesque surroundings contribute to its popularity as one of Sweden's preferred wedding venues.

SHOPPING

ESB Professional/Shutterstock.com

Östersund is a pleasant town to shop in with several of the major Swedish retail chains mixed with lots of small shops along the streets and alleys. The traditional shopping strip is based on Stortorget — follow the pedestrian street to the Domus building and then back along the parallel street Storgatan. Music lovers immediately head for Skivhörnan at Stortorget, one of the few remaining genuine record shops in north Sweden. If you are looking for local delicacies, walk to the farm shop Ost & Vilt at Prästgatan 19, where you can sample and buy products from across the county — everything from selected boxes of delicacies to handicrafts and souvenirs. More souvenirs — mostly local handicraft — are found in Gaupa Hantverk on Z-gränd 1. The shop is run by a cooperative of five local handicraft companies. The outdoor factor is strong in Jämtland, and obviously the Swedish chain for outdoor clothing, Naturkompaniet (Prästgatan 31) has a shop here. If you are looking for quality products for hunting and fishing, visit Landbys on Storgatan 19. Scandinavian design can be found at Butik Annorlunda on Storgatan 37, selling clothes from brands like Marimekko, Gunilla Pontén, Nygårdssanna, Noa Noa and Bitte Kai Rand. They also sell jewellery from Snow of Sweden and the Danish Pilgrim.
