Before rising to global and national importance with the arrival of the 2002 Olympic Winter Games, Park City, Utah was a relatively unknown gem of the west. Residents adored the area for its abundance of recreational opportunities, from hiking and biking, to skiing and snowboarding. THE CITY

annscreations/Shutterstock.com

Park City, Utah came under the swath of eager settlers during the Gold Rush of the 1800s. Rather than gold; however, whispers of silver in the mountains brought forth both American prospectors and international adventurers in the 1860s. This influence is still seen in the European-style resorts and architecture present in Park City. Gross economic gain from the height of mining rose over $400 million in silver and bore 23 millionaires, including creator of the nation's largest newspaper chain and media company, William Randolph Hearst.

Park City's mining success fell with the Depression of the 1930s, when falling mineral prices would spell certain doom for the city's boom years. The decline opened up an opportunity for success in Park City's other natural resources: the snow. Quickly becoming 'The Greatest Snow on Earth,' Park City now contributes greatly to Utah's economy with its tourism. The Canyons Resort, Deer Valley Resort and Park City Mountain Resort draw tangible success, reeling in excited sports enthusiasts and families year round.

Along with being an impressive ski town, Park City is the home of the Sundance Film Festival, the United States Ski Team, the training center of the Australian Freestyle Ski Team, the 2002

Olympic bobsled, luge and skeleton track at the Utah Olympic Park and an array of grand golf courses. Visitors can also expect to find northern Utah's largest collection of factory outlet stores. Several companies are headquartered in Park City, making it one of the wealthiest cities in the United States.

Park City's rich past and exciting future have led to a handsome number of its buildings being listed on the National Register of Historic Places, and an adventuresome 1,200 miles of tunnels remaining in the mountains from the mining era.

Best Time to Visit

The best time to visit Park City is from December to late March because of the ski season. If you're a winter sports enthusiast, this city is the perfect place for you. The season might even extend to mid-April, depending on the weather and snowfall. An important celebration in Park City is the Sundance Film Festival, a major film festival dedicated to independent cinema that takes place in January in the Egyptian theater.

On the other hand, spring is considered the off-season, which means you can save money and experience fewer crowds. If you're an outdoor enthusiast, summer is an ideal time to visit Park City for activities like hiking and mountain biking.
