Lying near the Hungarian and Serbian borders, Timisoara is the gateway to the West and has a long history of cosmopolitan multiculturalism. It's the birthplace of the 1989 Romanian Revolution that ended the Ceaușescu's dictatorship, an important centre in recent Romanian history. It is a green, pleasant and walkable city with cosy cafes, lively markets and interesting museums, offering plenty of entertainment to fill your time, whether you are visiting for a day or a week.

THE CITY

Todor Bozhinov Wikimedia Commons (image cropped)

Timisoara is the regional capital of the Banat province, the abundant agricultural heartland of Romania, as reflected in the city's many restaurants. It is Romania's most cosmopolitan city, owing to its liberal history and the diverse ethnicities that make up its population.

Timisoara has a large Hungarian population, as well as Serbs, Germans and Roma. It has been dubbed 'the city of flowers' in honour of the many parks which circle the city, but is most recently (and affectionately) known to its inhabitants as 'Primul Oraş Liber' - the first free town - in reference to its part in the revolution of 1989.

It was here that a Hungarian priest first spoke out against the dictator Ceauşescu, resulting in one of the most passionate revolutions in recent European history. The city has an easy-going Latin feel to it, with large squares lined by coffee shops and cafés and some fine architecture revealing the city's Hapsburg past. It was the first city in Europe to introduce horse-drawn trams in 1869, and they are still here now - minus the horses! Today, people are quickly adjusting to the new democracy, with a thriving city centre and new ventures opening all the time.

Timisoara offers many historical sites, cathedrals, churches and museums, as well as a vibrant nightlife and some amazing nature, being known as "the city of flowers". The city is best explored by foot in order to enjoy as much as possible the great architecture which can be found at every corner.

Piaţa Unirii

The main square of Timisoara's Old Town is the most picturesque and a focal point for the whole city. Named "Union Square" after the two cathedrals that face one another across it, this is the perfect place to relax in a café and engage in some people watching.

Serbian Orthodox Cathedral

Built in 1754, the same year as the Roman Catholic cathedral that it faces across the square, this immense building stands as a reminder that this city lies on the Serbian frontier, with a large

Serb population calling the city home and many cultural ties across the border.

Cetate Synagogue

In 1864, when Timisoara was part of the Austro-Hungarian empire, the Jews of the empire were emancipated and in the same year, they were granted the right to build this impressive synagogue. It was turned into the Romanian Jewish History Museum years later.

Romanian Orthodox Cathedral

With 5,000 wooden struts beneath it to hold it up from the swamp Timisoara is built on, the Romanian Orthodox Metropolitan Cathedral was built between 1936 and 1946. It has memorial crosses to those who died during the revolution of 1989. Also, this cathedral, now considered one of the symbols of the city, is located in a central and quiet area surrounded by parks.

Rose Park

If Timisoara is called "the city of flowers" it is largely due to this amazing park that offers a wide array of different, colourful flowers and lots of white benches that combine to create an extremely romantic atmosphere. Also, this park is pretty close to Bega River, so if you still feel like walking a bit, you should definitely check it out as well.

DINING

Agentia PROMO / Shutterstock.com

Traditional Romanian cuisine is big and hearty and it is characterised by the use of genuine, local ingredients to produce dishes of a distinctly central European flavour, with Turkish influences. The most popular ingredients you will find here are the various types of pork, cabbage, potatoes and mamaliga - a cornmeal similar to Italian polenta. Over the last decade or so, international food has become popular and you will find Mediterranean eateries all over the city.

Casa Bunicii
