Malaga might not be as popular as other Spanish cities, but a quick visit to the birthplace of Pablo Picasso is enough to win any visitor's heart. With a great mix of ancient history and modern culture, nearly 3,000 hours of sunshine a year, and several kilometres of beach, it's quite easy to see why Malaga has been described as 'Paradise City'.

THE CITY

Sean Pavone/Shutterstock

As you explore Malaga, the city's rich history comes to life — from its founding around 900 B.C. by the Phoenicians to the layers left behind by Greeks, Carthaginians, Romans, Visigoths, and Arabs. Each chapter has left its mark, shaping the Malaga you see today.

The legacy of the city's most famous son, Pablo Picasso, is everywhere. His presence is felt in the streets, in the local pride, and most notably at the Museo Picasso, which opened in 2003 and helped spark a new wave of cultural revival.

Not far from the museum, you'll find some of the city's most remarkable heritage sites: a Roman theatre, a Moorish fortress, and one of Spain's oldest bullrings. Across the Old Town, the Contemporary Art Centre (CAC) presents cutting-edge international work, while nearby, Plaza del Obispo regularly hosts open-air exhibitions. Close to the Cathedral, Teatro Cervantes continues to bring music, theatre, and dance to locals and visitors alike — proof that Malaga's creative spirit is still very much alive.

Dive into Malaga's rich history by visiting the ancient Alcazaba fortress and the Roman Theatre. Immerse yourself in art and culture at the Picasso Museum. Take a leisurely stroll along the vibrant Promenade of Pablo Ruiz Picasso. Indulge in delicious local cuisine at the bustling Mercado Central de Atarazanas or sip on refreshing drinks at the lively bars in Plaza de la Merced. With its beautiful beaches, lively nightlife, and a blend of history and modernity, Malaga promises a memorable experience for all.

Malaga's Old Town

Wandering through Malaga's Old Town is one of the best ways to get a feel for the city. The maze of narrow streets still follows the original Moorish layout — winding paths that offer shade during the heat and open into small squares lined with cafés, churches, and tapas bars. It's an easy place to get a bit lost in the best way possible.

At its heart is Plaza de la Constitución, the city's main square since medieval times. Nearby, Calle Larios is the grand pedestrian street — good for shopping, people-watching, or just walking under the seasonal lights and decorations. The area's full of small shops, old buildings, and hidden corners that tell Málaga's layered story.

Alcazaba

The Alcazaba is an 11th-century palatial fortification which stands as a testament to Malaga's rich Moorish past. You can walk up if you're feeling active, or take the bus if it's too hot — it drops you near the top. Inside, it's a mix of stone walls, arches, and quiet courtyards with views out over Malaga and the port.

Gibralfaro Castle

Built in the 1300s to protect the Alcazaba and house troops, Gibralfaro Castle still has walkable ramparts with some of the best views over Malaga, the port, and the coastline. Inside, there's a small military museum. The name comes from Jabal-Faruk, meaning 'hill of the lighthouse' in Arabic. The castle was also the site of a long siege in 1487, when Catholic forces took the city from the Moors.

Malaga's Beaches

Malaga's coastline runs right along the city, so you don't need to go far for a swim. The main stretch starts near the port along the Paseo de Pablo Ruiz Picasso. La Malagueta is the most central beach — about 10 minutes from the Old Town — with dark sand, showers, toilets, and sunbeds for hire. You'll spot the big Malagueta sign where everyone stops for photos. The beach is lined with chiringuitos, casual seafood spots where you can try grilled sardines (espetos) cooked over open fire. La Caleta, just a bit further east, is quieter but has the same setup — clean, calm water, and easy access.

Malaga Cathedral (La Manquita)

Locals call it La Manquita — 'the one-armed lady' — because only one of its towers was ever finished. Built between the 16th and 18th centuries, the cathedral mixes Renaissance design with a Baroque front. It actually sits on the site of a former mosque, and you can still spot a few traces of that. There's a long-running rumour that money meant for the second tower went to support the American War of Independence — not confirmed, but it's part of the local lore.

Plaza de la Merced

One of Málaga's liveliest squares, Plaza de la Merced is known for its statue of Picasso sitting on a bench — a nod to the artist who was born just a few steps away. The square has a long history as a public meeting spot, once home to a local market (hence the name Merced, tied to trade). These days, it's a social hub with cafés, bars, and outdoor tables where people linger late into the evening.

Picasso Museum

Picasso was born in Malaga, so it makes sense there's a museum dedicated to him here. It's inside a 16th-century palace, and the collection comes straight from his family — over 200 works, covering a bit of everything: painting, sketching, ceramics, even sculpture. Just around the corner at Plaza de la Merced, you can also visit the house where he was born.

Centre Pompidou Malaga

A colourful glass cube by the port marks the only Pompidou outside France. Inside, there's a mix of modern and contemporary art from the main collection in Paris, with rotating exhibits and some permanent works. Expect big names like Frida Kahlo (The Frame is here), plus a few thematic sections covering identity, the body, politics, and more.

Port of Malaga

The Port of Malaga is still a working port, but these days you're more likely to spot cruise ships and yachts than cargo. The waterfront's been cleaned up nicely — Muelle Uno is the modern bit, with restaurants, shops, and an art museum (Pompidou Centre)—good spot for a walk, a coffee, or just watching ships come and go. You're right by the Old Town too, so it's easy to swing by.

Roman Theatre

Right at the base of the Alcazaba, this is Malaga's oldest surviving structure — built in the 1st century BC during the reign of Emperor Augustus. It was in use for a few hundred years, then mostly forgotten. When the Moors arrived, they used stones from the theatre to help build the Alcazaba above it.

For centuries, it was completely buried. It wasn't rediscovered until the 1950s, when construction workers stumbled on it by accident. These days, it's been partly restored and open to the public. You can walk around the site and even catch the occasional open-air performance in summer.

El Caminito del Rey Hike

Around an hour outside Málaga, this cliffside path takes you through narrow walkways, deep gorges, and a high suspension bridge at the end. It's about 8 km one-way and takes a few hours, depending on your pace. It used to be known as dangerous, but it's now rebuilt and safe, with handrails and a clear path the whole way.

You'll need to book ahead, and there's a shuttle at the end that takes you back to where you started. The views are what people come for — steep rock faces, bright blue water, and huge open skies.

Cueva del Tesoro

A few kilometres outside Málaga in Rincón de la Victoria, this marine cave is one of the few in the world formed by water erosion. It's small but interesting, with narrow tunnels, odd rock shapes, and some ancient cave paintings. People lived here as far back as the Palaeolithic, and there's a local legend about hidden treasure — hence the name.

Malaga Park

Running alongside the port, Malaga Park (also called Parque de la Alameda) is a long, shaded stretch filled with exotic plants, fountains, and old sculptures. It was built on reclaimed land in the late 1800s and has a bit of that faded old-world charm. Not huge, but a good spot to cool off, take a slow walk, or just sit under the palm trees for a break from the sun.

Montes de Malaga Natural Park

Just 20 minutes from the city, the Montes de Malaga Natural Park is a good escape if you want fresh air and quiet. It's all hills, pine forests, and winding dirt trails — great for walking, cycling, or just taking a break from the coast. If you're lucky, you might spot eagles, owls, or even a wild boar.

There's also a small museum that offers a glimpse into the region's traditional winemaking and olive oil practices. Best accessed by car, though there are also hiking routes that start just outside the city.

Feria de Agosto

Malaga's biggest party of the year happens every August. It kicks off with fireworks and runs for about a week, with two main zones: one in the city centre during the day, and the official fairgrounds (a bit outside town) at night. Expect dancing in the streets, horses, live music, plenty of flamenco dresses, and locals handing you a glass of sweet wine. There are food stalls, rides, and casetas (tent bars) blasting everything from traditional Sevillanas to reggaeton.

Playa de las Acacias

This small beach sits between Pedregalejo and El Palo, in a quieter part of town east of the centre. It's popular with locals, with calm water, a relaxed vibe, and a wide promenade behind it. There are a few chiringuitos nearby if you want seafood or a cold drink, and it's a good spot for a more laid-back beach day away from La Malagueta.

More Info: Easy to reach by bus (bus line 3 or 11) or a 30-minute coastal walk from the city.

Hammam Al Ándalus

Recharge your batteries with a traditional Arab bath experience — rotating between hot and cold pools, steam rooms, and optional massages. The space is calm and atmospheric, with arches, mosaics, and soft lighting that make it feel miles away from the city, even though you're right in the centre. Good spot for a proper reset after a long day of sightseeing.

DINING

nito/Shutterstock

In Malaga, dining is a laid-back affair. You won't see many white tablecloths — instead, the city is packed with buzzing taverns and beachside chiringuitos serving up generous tapas and fresh seafood. Grilled fish, fried anchovies, and platters of shellfish are staples, especially along the beachfront and the Paseo Marítimo in Pedregalejo, where locals linger over long, lively meals.

Mercado de Atarazanas

Mercado de Atarazanas is one of Malaga's most iconic food spots, where locals come for fresh seafood, jamón, olives, cheeses—and where visitors stay for the tapas. Housed in a striking 19th-century iron-and-glass building, this lively market combines Andalusian tradition with bold local flavours. Don't miss the chance to grab a stool at one of the tapas stalls: grilled prawns, fried fish, and ice-cold vermouth, all served within arm's reach of the market buzz.

Bodega El Pimpi

El Pimpi is Malaga's most iconic restaurant — a sprawling 18th-century bodega filled with Andalusian charm, colourful tiles, and walls lined with wine barrels signed by local celebrities and Spanish icons like Antonio Banderas and Carmen Thyssen. Right in the heart of the Old Town, it's a popular stop for tapas, wine, and people-watching, with great views of the Alcazaba from the terrace.

The menu focuses on local classics — Iberian ham, fried aubergine with honey, Malaga-style anchovies — along with a strong selection of regional wines. Beyond food, El Pimpi often hosts cultural events like flamenco, poetry, and music nights in its Palomar de Picasso space, keeping the spirit of southern Spain alive.

Mesón Ibérico

Mesón Ibérico is one of those classic Spanish taverns where the buzz hits you the second you walk in. It's loud, friendly, tiled from floor to ceiling, and packed with locals, which is always a good sign. The menu sticks to the good stuff: jamón ibérico, fried sardines, grilled artichokes, hake or cod pil-pil... everything comes out hot and flavourful. It's walk-in only and almost always busy, but worth the wait.

Uvedoble Taberna

Tucked between the Roman Theatre and the Alcazaba, Uvedoble is a lively, unfussy spot where Malaga-style tapas get a creative twist. The menu mixes tradition and innovation, with standout dishes like the award-winning ensaladilla rusa (topped with prawn-head mayo), squid-ink fideos with baby cuttlefish, and swordfish collar slow-cooked in Iberian pork fat. The minimalist interior and small terrace draw a steady crowd of locals and visitors — book ahead if you want a seat.

Chiringuito El Tintero

El Tintero is one of Malaga's most entertaining places to eat — a loud, no-menu seafood spot right on the beach in El Palo. Waiters wander between tables shouting out dishes like crispy fried fish, garlic prawns, or grilled squid, and you just wave to claim what you want. It's fast, chaotic, and full of character, with the sea just steps away and the smell of fresh seafood in the air.

Casa Lola

Casa Lola has grown into a small empire in Malaga, but the original taberna on Calle Granada still steals the show. It’s compact, noisy in the best way, and often packed within minutes of opening. The menu features Andalusian classics — pintxos piled with prawns, salt cod or morcilla, crisp croquetas, and chicharrones fritos that are pure fried bliss. Pair it with a cold vermouth and you’ve got yourself a proper local ritual.

CAFÉS

joanna wnuk/Shutterstock

In Malaga, you won't find an abundance of trendy, international-style cafés, but there are a few authentic ones, along with cosy teashops boasting Arab-inspired atmospheres. And let's not forget the traditional 'churrerías', where you can savour churros dipped in creamy, hot chocolate.

Brunchit

Brunchit is a lively brunch spot just around the corner from Mercado de Atarazanas. Indulge in fresh-roasted coffee and colourful brunch plates like healthy bowls, pancakes, avocado toast, and Eggs Benedict, all served in a bright and clean setting. There are outdoor tables too, perfect if you want to soak up some street buzz.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Jakov Mitrovic/Shutterstock

Just like other Spanish cities like Madrid, Barcelona, and Granada, Malaga and the Costa del Sol are also famous for their vibrant nightlife. And just like the rest of Spain, the inhabitants of Malaga enjoy partying until the early hours of the morning.

In the centre of town, it's not difficult to find a bar with music and people chatting — there are many near each other. If you're looking for a proper nightclub, you should go to Puerto Marina in Benalmádena.

Speakeasy "The Pharmacy"

Speakeasy "The Pharmacy" is a hidden-style cocktail bar in Málaga's city centre, with art-deco interiors and a faint 'secret club' feel. Jazz drifts through the dim rooms while expert bartenders serve inventive, botanically themed cocktails and occasional classics. The atmosphere is refined but welcoming, ideal for a pre- or post-dinner nightcap in a space that feels thoughtful and fun.

SHOPPING

akturer/Shutterstock

Calle Larios and Calle Nueva form the lively heart of Malaga’s shopping scene. For a more modern retail fix, head to Muelle Uno, a waterfront mall with big-name brands and breezy views. And if you’re more into flavours than fashion, Mercado de Atarazanas is the go-to spot for fresh produce, local delicacies, and a taste of everyday Malagueño life.

Calle Larios & Calle Nueva

Calle Larios is one of Malaga’s main shopping streets — pedestrianised, elegant, and lined with stylish boutiques and big-name brands beneath grand neoclassical facades. Just around the corner, Calle Nueva offers a more laid-back shopping experience with a mix of international chains and local shops, ideal for souvenirs, clothing, or homewares. Both streets are car-free, making for easy, unhurried strolling — and when it’s time for a break, cafés and terraces spill onto the pavement, perfect for people-watching with a drink in hand.

Muelle Uno

Muelle Uno is an open-air shopping promenade right on the waterfront, with palm-lined walkways, sea views, and a relaxed vibe. You'll find a mix of local boutiques, international brands, restaurants, and gelato spots — plus regular pop-up markets and cultural events. It's also a great place to pause with a drink as the sun sets over the port.

El Corte Inglés

Spain's department store colossus is both loved and hated, but it successfully performs the main task of a department store, which is to offer most things to most people. Designer fashions, their own low and medium-priced lines, enormous perfumery and make-up departments, accessories, toys, children's and baby's clothes, art materials, souvenirs, food and delicatessen, household furniture and decorations, electrical goods, books, and a range of services can be found here.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Málaga-Costa del Sol Airport (AGP)

Málaga-Costa del Sol Airport (AGP) is located just 10 km from the city centre — about 15 to 25 minutes depending on traffic. The Cercanías C-1 train is the fastest option, getting you into town in around 12 minutes, with departures every 20–30 minutes between early morning to around midnight. The A Express bus is another solid choice, running from Terminal 3 to central stops like María Zambrano station in about 25 minutes, with services every 25–45 minutes until midnight. Taxis and rideshares are also available right outside the terminal.

Passport & Visa

Citizens of European Union (EU) and European Economic Area (EEA) countries do not need a visa to enter Spain, only a valid ID. Many other countries, including the United Kingdom, United States, Canada, United Arab Emirates, Australia, and New Zealand, benefit from visa-free entry for short stays of up to 90 days within a 180-day period.

Visitors from visa-exempt countries must hold a valid passport and, starting in late 2025, will need to apply for an ETIAS (European Travel Information and Authorisation System) authorisation online before travelling.

For those requiring a visa, such as travellers from some Middle-East, African or Asian nations, a Schengen visa must be obtained prior to arrival. All travellers should ensure their passport is valid for at least three months beyond their intended stay.

Best Time to Visit

Malaga enjoys a mild climate year-round, with warm winters and hot, dry summers. Spring (March to June) is one of the best times to visit — the weather is pleasant, and the city feels lively without being overcrowded. If you're more into sun and sea, the summer months are perfect for a beach-focused trip, though July and August can be quite hot.

Malaga also shines during its biggest annual events. Semana Santa (Holy Week) in spring transforms the city with dramatic religious processions. In August, the city bursts into colour for the Feria de Malaga, a week-long street party with music, dancing, food, and fireworks.

Public Transport

Malaga's public transport is easy to use and covers most of what travellers need. There's a two-line metro, city buses, and Cercanías trains that connect nearby towns and the airport. They all use the same rechargeable card (Tarjeta de Transporte), which works across buses, metro, and trains.

For short stays, the pay-as-you-go option is the simplest and most flexible. That said, the historic centre is compact and very walkable, so you might only need transport for longer trips.

For fares, routes, timetables, and where to get or top up your card, check the official Málaga Transport Consortium or Metro de Málaga websites.

Taxi

It's easy to find a taxi in Malaga — official ones are white with a blue diagonal stripe and a roof light, and you can catch them at taxi ranks, the airport, train stations, or just by flagging one down. Ride-sharing apps like Uber, Bolt and Cabify also operate in the city and work well for both short trips and airport runs.

Post

Málaga's main post office is on Calle Santa Lucía 7 and is open Monday to Friday from 8:30am to 8:30pm. Services include sending letters and parcels, collecting post, and P.O. box pick-up. You can spot a Correos branch by its yellow facade, and stamps are easy to find in tobacconists marked with a 'Tabacos' sign.

Pharmacy

Malaga's pharmacies are mostly independent, with a few well-known ones in convenient spots. Farmacia Caffarena, on Alameda Principal 2 in the city centre, is open 24 hours and carries everything from prescriptions to skincare. Farmacia Mata, located on Calle Larios, is one of the city's oldest, known for its custom preparations and classic interior. Closer to the port, Farmacia Castellón near Muelle Uno is modern and well-stocked, good for anything from travel essentials to beachside first aid.

Look for the green cross signs—24-hour service rotates, and the on-duty pharmacy is usually listed on the window of any branch.

Electricity

Spain's power grid operates at 230 volts with a frequency of 50 Hz, using Type F (Schuko plug) and Type C (Europlug) outlets. Both types accept plugs with two round prongs, common across continental Europe.
